

ABOUT THE STATE

Happenings of Interest from Different Sections.

Schools in Fletcher are closed because of a prevalence of scarlet fever.

The price of milk in Brattleboro will drop March 1. It now sells for 16 cents a quart.

A horse belonging to a Norwich university man got loose one day last week and traveled five miles south on the railroad track before it was caught, crossing the Elbow and Harlow bridges and the twin bridges.

Five new steel gages have been placed at the head of the stairways at the union station in Burlington leading down to where the trains depart. This has been done to protect passengers, who frequently get in dangerous places while trying to find their train.

Edward H. Talpner of Rutland, the father of 10 children, was fatally injured Monday afternoon while engaged at his work at the plant of the Eddy Ice company. The accident that resulted in his death was caused by the falling of a 150-pound ice skid. This struck him on the head and fractured his skull and he died a few minutes after arriving at the Rutland hospital. Some one took a hold on the skid and it slipped from the men on the top of the plant.

Albert E. Brown, a laborer living in Newfane and employed by Herman Eddy, sustained a fracture of the right leg in a peculiar manner late Sunday afternoon. He was near the iron bridge in the Hazen place a mile and a half below the village, when he stepped out of the road to permit an automobile to pass. In stepping back into the road his foot slipped on the ice and his leg went into a deep rut in such a way as to break it twice below the knee.

Public attention is made that B. F. Andrews & Son, box and lumber manufacturers, with an extensive plant in White River Junction, has filed a petition in bankruptcy for its central office in Lancaster, N. H. The liabilities of the corporation are placed at $110,785.50, while the assets are said to be $27,840.48. Irving A. Hinkley of Lancaster, N. H., is the legal representative of the corporation. About 25 men are employed in the White River Junction plant, which was started about two years ago.

Freshman week at Norwich university, Northfield, Mass., (Thursday) evening with a hop, which is to be the main feature of the week. The following two days are taken up by the sophomore carnival. Friday morning interclass polo games will be held in the riding hall. The afternoon will be devoted to the basketball tournament. The evening will be taken up by fraternity house parties. On Saturday morning the seniors will give an exhibition drill, after which there will be snowshoe parties. In the afternoon the variety will play Middlebury in basketball. Saturday evening the sophomores will furnish an entertainment followed by an open dance in armory hall. Sunday will close the eventful week, when everybody says goodbye.

DEFECTIVE CHILDREN.

More Than 200 Have Been Aided By Board of Charities.

The reading of that part of the report of the state board of charities and probation dealing with the physically defective child is highly interesting. Bringing this department of the board's work up to date, we find that more than 200 physically defective children have been given aid, more than 150 non-committed—that is, children whom the board has voluntarily assisted. Nearly every defect has been treated. Two brief quotations from Secretary Jeffrey's report should be made. They are as follows:

"It is gratifying to know that so skillfully and well have these cases been handled that two months have elapsed where a child has been taken under our supervision and care. All the children have been greatly benefited or entirely restored to normal physical condition."

"Children who could not talk have had speech restored. Children without hearing have been made to hear. Children without sight have been made to see. Children who could not walk now run about and play. Children who were hopeless and helpless have been restored to reasonable normal childhood."

More than 150 of the cases treated by the board of charities have been wholly without expense to the state of Vermont, the necessary funds being raised by private subscription. Some have had no bills, hospitals, or sanatoriums have reduced their charges one-half, so that this large number has been treated at an expense of only $4,088.

In 1918 and the early months of 1919, Miss Lena C. Ross was allowed $15 a month for ten months for investigating these cases. Deducting this amount the total over head charge for administering this department of public welfare has been but $254.50 out of a total expenditure of $4,358. This is less than $2 per child for transportation, investigation and incidental expense.

RHEUMATISM LEAVES YOU FOREVER

Deep-Seated Uric Acid Deposits Are Dissolved and the Rheumatic Poison Starts to Leave the System Within Twenty-four Hours.

Every druggist in this country is authorized to say to every rheumatic sufferer that if two bottles of Allen's, the sure cure of rheumatism, does not stop all aches, reduce swollen joints and drive away from the system the uric acid poison, he will gladly return your money without comment.

James H. Allen, the discoverer of Allen's, who for many years suffered the agonies of acute rheumatism, before all doctors knew that it does not wait a set of anyone's money when Allen's is taken, he has instructed the Allen's Pharmacy to guarantee it in every instance—free.

FIVE WEEKS IN SOVIET RUSSIA

Final Chapter of Personal Narrative By President Schlesinger of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

Hotel Savoy was one of Moscow's most beautiful hotels, and its location in the heart of the opera and theatrical district made it one of the gayest hostels in Moscow; a kind of a four-story Ritz. The best known singers, actors, theatrical managers and all other luminaries of the stage world were housed there.

To-day, only government officials, largely from the commissariat of foreign affairs, located within a stone's throw from the Savoy, live there. It is also reserved by the government for visitors and guests from foreign lands. The former luxury and elegance of the hotel have totally disappeared. Gone is the splendor of the reception rooms and lobby, which used to be the favorite rendezvous of the stage celebrities of Moscow and of their admirers. The massive leather chairs, the opulent carpets, silk portieres and crystal chandeliers have disappeared. The candy stands and book stalls are there no more either, and the doorman and servants in gorgeous liveries, who stood guard at the doors, have vanished from sight. Hotel Savoy is a proletarian hotel now. Its visitors have to open the doors and close them by their own efforts; they sit on wooden benches or stand up on bare uncovered floors, and have to be contented with the light shed by the lone electric bulb in the room.

As you open the door of the main entrance and ascend the few steps leading to the office, you are halted by a Red Army man, gun in hand, to whom you must exhibit your pass card, your permit to live in Moscow. This done, you have to inform the young woman at the desk, with the big ledger, as to whom you are looking for at the hotel. You stand there in line waiting until everything is found to be "legitimate," and only then are you permitted to advance.

By the time I had gone through all these formalities with the Red Army Guard, and the girl at the desk, and had climbed four stories with my bag up to the room No. 107, I had reserved for me—there are no elevators running at the Savoy—I was covered with beads of perspiration. One look at the room that was destined to be my home during my entire stay in Moscow, the bed in that room, and particularly the bedding, upon that bed, was, however, sufficient to send a shudder down my back.

What a room that was! The paper on the walls and the ceiling was indescribably dirty and hung in pieces. There was an iron bedstead, two small straw-packed pillows, two crippled chairs and a three-legged table in the room. The filthy looking pillows were without covers, and the mattress without a top sheet. The idea that I would have to sleep in this bed and on this uncovered mattress and pillows, almost took my breath away.

As I stood there in contemplation of my cheerless prospects, I heard a bang on the door, and before I had a chance to say a word, I walked Simon Ogursky, whom I knew well in New York, and fell upon my neck. He learned from Boris Reinstein that I was in Moscow and discovered at the foreign office that I was stopping at the Savoy.

"You must see that I get some sheets, pillow covers and a blanket," I told him a little later.

Poor Ogursky certainly did his best. He ran from one place to another, to the commandant of the hotel, the supervisors, but could not obtain more than a promise that everything would be forthcoming to-morrow. For the first night, he advised me to wrap up the pillows with my top shirts and to use my overcoat for a blanket. He gave me some additional instructions how to get along until the following morning, and then took me down to the dining room for supper.

The evening meal consisted of black bread, three sardines, two small potato pancakes and two glasses of tea. Before leaving the dining room I also obtained a package of 25 cigarettes and a box of matches. I learned later that cigarette smokers are furnished by the hotel with 25 cigarettes daily. I told Ogursky of my appointment with Goldfarb for the midnight hour, and he volunteered to escort me to the latter's home on the Sadovaya. And so the hour was nearly 11 and the distance from the hotel was considerable, he proposed that we start out at once and walk through the principal streets of the city. Indeed, I was quite eager myself to see Bolshevik Moscow at night.

The night was divinely beautiful, starry and moonlight. Yet, somehow as I was looking into the dark blue firmament, it seemed to me that our New York moon shines more cheerfully, while its Moscow face is overdrawn with a painful haze and mist. I even made this suggestion to Ogursky.

"It is the same sky, the same stars and the same moon," he said with a smile, "but while you are looking at them here in Moscow your mind is still under the spell of life in America. That is why your New York moon seems more cheerful to you. Forget America for a while. Think of the great fight which Russia is waging to-day for the liberation of mankind, and then look at our moon and it will appear less somber to you."

Per Capita. Weary after 12 months' hard work, the pretty typist sought solitude among the healthy hills of Haleheart. The advertisements had attracted her. Haleheart was described as the best, prettiest, finest and everything else apart in the world.

"Tell me," she said on her first day, when she met a starchy old relie of the district, "what is the death rate in Haleheart?"

The local warden advertisement nodded his head reassuringly. "Wonderful steady, man—wonderful steady!" he replied. "One death to each person."—London Answers.

CHelsea

Sheriff George A. Tracy went to Montpelier Sunday afternoon to avail himself of visiting the legislature for a few days and also to attend to some business matters.

Fred A. Ordway returned Monday evening from Boston, where he had been on a few days' business trip and while at the "Hub" looked up our former townsman, Albert P. Bugbee, with whom he spent a portion of Sunday.

There will be a meeting at the high school building on Friday afternoon of this week at 3 o'clock of all the townspeople who are interested in forming a parent-teacher association, and all parents and friends of both the school and pupils are urged to attend. This is a most meritorious movement and should be given the consideration and support which the object for such an association warrants and demands.

A very interesting stereopticon lecture, "A Trip to Ireland," was given by Mrs. Percival Hewitt on Tuesday evening at the vestry of the Methodist church, the seating capacity of which was taxed to the limit. Mrs. Hewitt was born and reared in the city of Cork, Ireland, and having traveled extensively in her native country, was thoroughly conversant with her subject and she very comprehensively explained the various pictures as they were thrown upon the screen. During her lecture she sang several solos and duets, all typical of Ireland. Both the lecture and music were fine and thoroughly enjoyed by all who availed themselves of the opportunity of taking this theoretical trip to the Emerald Isle.
